Preschool

What’s On Your Child’s Plate?

The last 10 years the U.S. has seen a renaissance of information that is available to the general public on health and nutrition. Thanks to groups like the American Pediatric Association and American Dietetic Association, today’s parents have access to current and best practices in the areas of health and wellness. The struggle for many of today’s parents is not with knowing what is healthy for their children to consume, but in how to make healthy choices and successful changes work long term for their families. The good news is that the pediatricians and nutritionists associated with these groups are encouraging families to make incremental and common sense changes in their eating habits. The doctors at WebMD offer the following suggestions to assist families in creating long term success in the area of nutrition.

- Guide your family's choices rather than dictate foods. Make a wide variety of healthful foods available in the house. This practice will help your children learn how to make healthy food choices.
- Encourage your children to eat slowly. A child can detect hunger and fullness better when eating slowly.
- Eat meals together as a family as often as possible. Try to make mealtimes pleasant with conversation and sharing, not a time for scolding or arguing. If mealtimes are unpleasant, children may try to eat faster to leave the table as soon as possible. They then may learn to associate eating with stress.
- Plan for snacks. Continuous snacking may lead to overeating, but snacks that are planned at specific times during the day can be part of a nutritious diet, without spoiling a child's appetite at meal times. You should make snacks as nutritious as possible, without depriving your children of occasional chips or cookies, especially at parties or other social events.
- Discourage eating meals or snacks while watching TV. Try to eat only in designated areas of your home, such as the dining room or kitchen. Eating in front of the TV may make it difficult to pay attention to feelings of fullness, and may lead to overeating.
- Encourage your children to choose water as their beverage. Over consumption of sweetened drinks and sodas has been linked to increased rates of obesity in children.
